The Border Policy Research Institute (BPRI) is offering several thesis fellowships to students doing research on public policy issues related to national borders. The fellowship consists of a full GRA stipend for one academic quarter, payment of 4 credits of graduate tuition, and $500 of additional funding that may be used for research-related expenses (supplies, datasets, travel, etc.). Students receiving fellowships will be affiliated with the BPRI and may be asked to present their research findings in a public setting upon completion of their project.

About the BPRI
The BPRI is a multi-disciplinary research institute at Western Washington University focused on research that informs policy-makers on matters related to the Canada – U.S. border. The University established the BPRI in 2005 to further its mission of promoting research, academic programs and public programming on critical policy issues affecting the Pacific Northwest region and Canada. To learn more about the BPRI, visit www.wwu.edu/bpri.

Eligibility and Application Instructions
Thesis fellowships are available to full time students whose research topic has been approved by a thesis advisor or committee. To be eligible, topics must have significant public policy implications. Applicants must submit a summary of their thesis proposal, including research questions, methodology, and importance (3-5 pages), and a letter of recommendation from the thesis advisor.

Applications and inquiries should be sent to:
Dr. Laurie Trautman, Associate Director of BPRI
Laurie.Trautman@wwu.edu
(360) 650-2642